Social dramas are Serious, realistic, and acamatic films. They identify a problem in society and explore a Cure in society through harrative, in which an individual confronts the problem. The Conventions this genre uses are far framing of shots to show the protagonist is trapped within the myse en scene, Close-ups of the protagonist in times of high emotions contronting the social issue, and motif of the struggle. Yes it's true as the audience becomes used to the genre social dramais, they demand more as the because they became emotionally engaged with the protagonist
In the film the pursuit of happiness

An example of this in the film The Pursuit of Happiness is the bath room scene with chins and christaphor. This piticular framing scene shows the audence the protagonist is vulnerable and trapped within the muse on scone. It shows the audence how difficult the protagonistis struggle and freedoom and lack of choice he has. Chris and Christaphor are trapped in the bathroom. This makes the auidence emotionally engaged as they sympathize for them and maybe relate to them in away. Which makes them engaged and Want to Know more of the genre social drama through the fither the pursuit as Mappiness looking after her kids He tells her that her daughter said her first word today. It is a long dark close-up of approximately 53 seconds long when she realises what she misses out on when she's at work trying to provid her family with income. Erin starts crying when she realises what she has missed out on This makes the guidence emotionally engaged with the protagonist because the close-up is a very long and intimate shot which helps us Identify with the protagonist. It makes the auidence want to see more as they are starting to understand the social genre social dramais and become emotionally engaged with the protagonist/
