- 2 Conduct a critical social inquiry involves using social studies concepts and giving specific evidence, and involves:
  - deciding on the focus for the inquiry and developing research questions
  - gathering information and background ideas
  - explaining people's points of view, values and perspectives that underpin their participation and/or action in society and how these relate to the focus of the inquiry
  - reporting the findings and their relationship to the focus of the social inquiry
  - evaluating the processes of social inquiry in relation to the findings, including making suggestions for improvement.

Conduct a critical social inquiry in depth involves analysing by comparing and contrasting points of view, values and perspectives that relate to the focus of the inquiry.

Conduct a critical social inquiry comprehensively involves critically evaluating the findings and considering the implications of the findings in contexts outside the inquiry.

- 3 Evaluation involves weighing up strengths and weaknesses.
  - Evaluating the process may include critiquing the primary and secondary sources used and evaluating their potential for bias and inaccuracies; considering possible ethical issues relating to the inquiry; and reflecting on how the process may have influenced the findings. This may also include suggesting areas for improvement, extension, and/or follow-up.
  - Critically evaluating the findings may include critiquing their validity, relevance, significance.
- 4 Findings can be reported using written, oral, or audio-visual means.
- Social studies concepts describe the fundamental and enduring relationships between people in a society. These may include society, culture, change, perspectives, rights, values, sovereignty, government, religion, laws, roles, responsibilities, community, diversity, and social justice.
- Further information on social inquiry is included in The New Zealand Curriculum, , Learning Media, Ministry of Education, 2009, and the Teaching and Learning Guide for Senior Social Studies.
