Scenario

The local high school is hosting its annual school ball. Jo and her friend Ryan, who are both 17, are on their way to their friend Ben's house. Ben's parents are hosting a get-together for several of Ben's school friends before the ball. Jo has brought a case of RTD alcohol that she asked her parents to buy for her. She saw the RTDs advertised on TV and thinks they look like a lot of fun.

When Jo and Ryan arrive at the party, Jo notices that some of the students have already drunk quite a few alcoholic drinks and are clearly past their limit. Jo is pressured by the others to take shots and drink as much as she can before the ball starts. Ryan knows that the school rules are clear: Do not arrive drunk, and do not bring alcohol to the ball. Ben's parents are drinking as well. They encourage the students to have fun like they did when they were young. Ryan is not drinking because he is the sober driver. After quite a few shots of alcohol, Jo and some other students stumble into Ryan's car and he drives them to the ball.

At the ball, Jo and her friends smuggle alcohol past the principal, who is at the door greeting everyone who comes into the school hall. They manage to act relatively normal and sneak into the toilets with some more drinks. A few minutes later Jo's friends come running out of the toilets to say that Jo has passed out and is lying on the floor. Ryan tells a teacher, and they call an ambulance.

By the time Jo's parents come to collect her from the ball, she is conscious but feeling unwell. They are angry with Jo and the school. The principal says she has no option but to suspend Jo until the matter is sorted out.
