Sample response

Hiria is using an internet dating app to find a partner. Rangatahi today usually find a partner at school, sports, and other events. She is looking for someone who is tall and preferably solid, like a tōtara tree. He also needs to be able to speak te reo Māori, because Hiria would like someone to talk to in te reo Māori so she can get better herself at speaking it. He should also be good at kapa haka and singing. He also needs to be supportive of her work on the marae, where she helps her whānau. He should be good at school and be funny, so that he can cheer her up when she is sad.

Question Two: Would he be a good match for Hiria? Why / Why not?

Hone does tick some boxes in terms of what Hiria wants in a boyfriend. He is into kapa haka, and speaks te reo Māori, judging by his responses to Hiria. But he probably isn't the right person for Hiria. He is too short, and this, combined with his like for fast food, would make him less attractive to her. But the main reason he would not be a suitable partner is that he does not live in Tāmaki-makau-rau: he is only there on holiday. This means he may not be much use as a person to practice speaking te reo Māori with, or someone who could help Hiria when she is at the marae.

Question Three: What is Miriama’s advice to Hiria, and why does she think this way? Do you agree with her? Why / why not?

I would agree with Miriama’s words of advice. I would expect that if you put your profile on a dating app you would put as much on it as possible to show that you are a genuine person. If you put less on there, it is suspicious. Hone’s profile doesn’t have a photo of himself or many photos of him doing stuff. He only has one Facebook friend, and his suggestion that they meet at 11.00 p.m. is also very suspicious.
