Explanatory notes

Definitions

Health or wellbeing settings include but is not limited to – the acute care, aged care, community support, disability, mental health, social services and youth development sectors.

Holistic needs include physical, emotional, social, cultural, spiritual, mental, socio-economic, creative and occupational.

People refers to those accessing services in a health or wellbeing context and includes the family, whānau and natural supports of the person who is at the centre of support. Other terms used for this person may include client, consumer, customer, patient, individual, resident, service user, tūroro or tangata whai ora.

Service philosophies refers to the models or approaches of support that may be applied within a health or wellbeing setting. A service philosophy provides an over-arching set of underlying principles, aims and objectives, operational parameters, and reviewable outcomes which direct the nature of consumer support and the way in which it is provided.

Outcomes and evidence requirements

Outcome 1

Compare the key attributes of service philosophies used in health or wellbeing settings.

Range evidence is required for three service philosophies

Evidence requirements

1.1 The underlying principles and application of each model are outlined in terms of how it intends to support health and wellbeing outcomes for people.

- 1.2 The strengths and limitations of each philosophy are compared in terms of supporting people's holistic needs.
- 1.3 Contexts in which each philosophy could be used are identified in terms of why it is suitable for the people supported or the type of support.

Please note

Providers must be granted consent to assess against standards (accredited) by NZQA, before they can report credits from assessment against unit standards or deliver courses of study leading to that assessment.

Industry Training Organisations must be granted consent to assess against standards by NZQA before they can register credits from assessment against unit standards.

Providers and Industry Training Organisations, which have been granted consent and which are assessing against unit standards must engage with the moderation system that applies to those standards.

Requirements for consent to assess and an outline of the moderation system that applies to this standard are outlined in the Consent and Moderation Requirements (CMRs). The CMR also includes useful information about special requirements for organisations wishing to develop education and training programmes, such as minimum qualifications for tutors and assessors, and special resource requirements.
