Definitions

Health or wellbeing contexts include but are not limited to – the acute care, aged care, community support, disability, mental health, social services and youth development sectors, in New Zealand.

Natural supports include but are not limited to the family/whānau of the person who is at the centre of support.

New learning refers to knowledge and underpinning theory related to health and wellbeing that is acquired through personal research and its application in practice.

Person refers to the individual (or linked group) accessing services in a health or wellbeing context. Other terms used may include – client(s), consumer(s), customer(s), patient(s), resident(s), service user(s), tūroro or tangata whai ora.

Practice refers to responses to a condition, impairment, a specific situation or social issue and includes who is involved, what their roles are, and the support and/or treatment that is provided.

Service philosophy refers to the model or approach to support that is applied within a health or wellbeing setting. A service philosophy provides an over-arching set of underlying principles, aims and objectives, operational parameters, and reviewable outcomes which direct the nature of support and the way in which it is provided.

Outcomes and performance criteria

Outcome 1

Reflect on new learning to identify implications for own practice in a health or wellbeing context.

Performance criteria

1.1 New learning is analysed to identify how it has confirmed and challenged prior knowledge and experience.

1.2 Implications of new learning are identified in terms of potential changes to current practice.

Range implications must include – actions of self when supporting a

 $\operatorname{person}_{\cdot}\operatorname{who}$ is at the centre of support and relating to their natural supports.

1.3 Implications of new learning for self are outlined in terms of current and future personal and professional development as a result.
